SUMMARY

Dennard by far is the most consistent DB in college football. With the proper training and honing of his techniques he can be a good DB in the NFL. His ability to turn his hips and get his head around on a swivel makes him already a better DB in the NFL because today that is some what of a lost art in the NFL if you look around the league. His ability to be left on an island in a 4-3 defense goes to show that he is confident, even without a safety over the top of him he still has the speed and wherewithal to make a play. What makes me really LOVE this kid is the fact that he will come off the corner and play run support. Tackling is and has been a lost art when it comes to DB's and he definitely has that old school swag about himself where he is not afraid to hit you whether a WR or a RB. Dennard will lower his shoulder with the best of them. I have a strong feeling the Steelers will pick him, even though they play a lot of cover two defense his skills to read and react make him a perfect fit. His ability to jam the receiver, react and/or jump a route based on how he turns them the way he wants. It is something that the Steelers have always had and now that their existing core is getting older, Dennard would be a major upgrade at a much needed position.
